Believe It Or Not!!

An Austrian mountain biker dropped 12.46 feet from an elevated platform to crush a small cardboard box with his back tire and set a world record in the process.
Mario Neurauter attempted the stunt at Bike Republic Sölden Festival in September 2025, and managed to set the Guinness World Record for the highest vertical drop on a bicycle on to a target (male).
Neurauter rode his bike off an elevated platform 12.46 feet over the ground and managed to land his back tire on a small red box, which he successfully crushed.
"I wasn't scared, but I knew that hitting the box would be tricky. I hadn't trained for it specifically, so I didn't know how many attempts it would take. In the end, it worked out pretty well," he told Guinness World Records.
Neurauter also attempted the Guinness World Records for the highest vertical drop on a bicycle and highest 360 vertical drop on a bicycle onto a target during the same weekend, but evidence from those attempts is still being reviewed by the record-keeping organization.

TECHNICAL ANALYSIS

	SUPPORT	SPOT	Δ	RESISTANCE	COMMENTS
EUR/USD	1.0917 - 1.1050	1.1205	0.27%	1.1240 - 1.1460	EUR/USD gains ground as traders take some profits off the table after the strong move. Attention is glued today on the US CPI, which could influence expectations for Fed's policy path and trigger volatility across currency markets. However, ECB commentary and developments in the broader geopolitical landscape will also shape the pair's near-term outlook.
USD/JPY	157.00 - 158.00	158.30	0.00%	159.00 - 160.00	USD/JPY holds near 158.30 as the yen remains under pressure from the wide US-Japan interest-rate differential. However, concerns over potential Japanese intervention and uncertainty surrounding the BoJ policy outlook may limit further upside. Today, the US CPI report will be the main market catalyst, with an upside surprise likely to reinforce dollar demand.
GBP/USD	1.2825 - 1.3026	1.3275	0.42%	1.3380 - 1.3420	GBP/USD trades near 13275 drawing support from a more resilient UK outlook and expectations of further BoE tightening. However, uncertainty surrounding the upcoming UK budget and broader geopolitical risks could limit further gains. Today, BoE Governor Bailey's remarks and other policymakers' comments will be in focus, alongside the US economic docket and Fed signals.
USD/CHF	0.8143 - 0.8207	0.8320	-0.12%	0.8345 - 0.8450	USD/CHF The safe-haven influxes into the Swissy offset carry-trade weakness and cap USD/CHF rallies near 0.8370. Today, the US CPI report will be the main focus, with the inflation outcome likely to influence Treasury yields and dollar demand. However, SNB policy expectations and broader risk sentiment will also remain key factors for the pair.
